PKK terrorists on Sunday launched rockets on a police checkpoint in the southeastern Turkish province of Hakkari.

Semdinli governor Altug Caglar said that PKK terrorists fired two rockets on a police checkpoint in the town on Sunday evening at around 10.20 pm.

One rocket hit a security barrier while the other rocket landed on a nearby road.

The attack did not cause any casualties.

The perpetrators fled under cover of darkness.

PKK terrorist activities across Turkey experienced a resurgence following the ending of the unilateral cease-fire of the PKK terror organization two years ago.

Two hundred fifteen Turkish security personnel have now been killed in PKK attacks since June 2004.

Three soldiers were killed and three others were injured in a PKK terror attack in the northeastern Turkish province of Gumushane on Sunday.
